Betty's Story

When Betty came to Calvary, she was fleeing an abusive husband who had started using drugs. As her husband got more violent, she fled her home and moved in with family. After several months of staying in different places, the instability in her life took a heavy toll – she lost her job and began drinking again. Betty desperately wanted a change. Luckily, she found Calvary.

At Calvary Betty found a refuge from the chaos, and the support to begin healing. Working with her case manager, she developed a personalized plan. She attended daily relapse prevention meetings, met with our therapist, and enrolled in our job placement program. After a few weeks of job searching, she found a well-paid, full-time position in a restaurant as a cook.

Betty has maintained her sobriety and is thriving at work. Earlier this year, she moved out of Calvary into her own home. "I almost couldn't imagine this," Betty said, "But Calvary's staff did. They believed in me. It made all the difference."

With more than thirty-five years of experience, we know our model works: at Calvary, women like Betty are achieving their goals and ending their homelessness for good.

"Calvary is a very inclusive place and I am lucky to be a part of an organization that does such a great job with helping women overcome the challenges they are facing and get back on their feet."
